Course Introduction

Welcome to this special advanced and certified module that has been cautiously and painstakingly designed, for the sole purpose of developing some basic and advance parenting skills for adult parents and carers in the 21st century. This course is also intended for individuals working with children and for those professionals who just want to acquire additional knowledge in parenting and childhood development who would just like to increase their own erudition within the field of social scientific developmental studies and research.

This parenting and childhood development module is an introductory course, with 11 syllabuses – carefully constructed to address the everyday needs; parents and carers essentially request – in order to develop their own understanding towards ancient and modern parenting styles. The syllabuses outlined throughout this module will also present – theoretical and practical examples, with key demonstrations on how to construct and to improve behaviour when dealing with children. There are also sections on positive childhood development and problem behaviours which relate to various parenting styles that produce these types of outcomes that are encouraged and usually learnt by children through the process of socialisation.

Parents have also requested better understanding about special educational needs and what sort of practical measures they can take to help improve their relationship with children and how to assist them academically – will also be presented in this course along with standards and expectations adults and children have for one another.

Issue on mental health will also be addressed in this module; particularly within children and the types of difficulties these make for caring parents who receive very little help and support from local authorities. Adolescence; is also another method of study clients and learners will receive – during this module, you will acquire additional knowledge in its early developmental stages and will later develop your own comprehension in understanding all of these issues and methods of study.

This parenting and childhood development module is nationally recognised and has been used to regain – children who were taken and placed into care by the local authorities as a result of poor parenting. Parents ended up getting their children back into their own residence again after completing this course. Most of these modules have helped mothers and fathers advance their parenting skills and gain a more responsible behaviour. They were able to identify key areas of concern which they never really knew they had until doing this course which ended up moulding dexterity in parenting.

Those who have done this course have gone on to do specialist roles with children of all ages and has given them the platform to develop additional skills in the various occupations these learners have established after completion. It has also helped parents to build a more confident style and have helped them reshape their parenting skills with an overall understanding of their children's emotional, psychological and physical development.